What (Sort of Goods) are (Criminal) Sanctions?

• I want to argue that we should judge criminal sanctions not so much by the evils (or harms) they reduce as by the goods they promote.

• But, like most criminologists, I am instinctively a minimalist when it comes to sanctions
1. If we believe in the values of kindness and forgiving, then we ought to keep the institution of penal law a small one.

2. If we believe in the values of keeping civil societies civil, then we have to keep the institution of penal law a small one.

3. If we believe in the value of living in cohesive, integrated societies, then we must retard the growth of the institution of penal law.
What sort of good is justice?

• ‘Justice is the first virtue of social institutions, as truth is of systems of thought’ (Rawls)
  – Distributive justice; social justice
• A constitutive good (of the good society)
• And a productive good (for humanity)
  – ‘Without justice there is no peace’
  – Reciprocal social relations and cooperation are essential to human life (and evolution)
And criminal justice?

• Offending violates reciprocities (and because it constitutes unjust distribution)
• Sanctions exist to secure or to restore a ‘just order’ of things
  – in this sense they are a productive good
• They are also a communicative good
  – They affirm and express values
• But... they can involve negative and/or positive exercises of power
Sanctions as penal power

Negative power/
Slicing off
• Imposing harms
• Taking away life
• Taking away (negative) liberty
• Taking away time or demanding effort
• Taking away worth/money

Positive power/
Grafting in
• Requiring goods
• Life enhancing
• Developing (positive) liberty
• Constructive time and work
• Enhancing worth/Compensating loss
The Road from Crime is a timely and compelling documentary film funded by the UK Economic and Social Research Council and by the Center for Advancing Correctional Excellence at George Mason University. It has been co-produced by academics, ex-offenders, justice practitioners and professional film-makers in order to stimulate debate about how and why people stop offending, and about how the justice system can better support them in that process.

The film is available with English, Finnish, French, German and Spanish subtitles and can be downloaded free of charge or ordered on DVD via:

One criminological framework for thinking about reintegration?

Personal Reintegration
- The re-development of the self
- Capacity building

Social Reintegration
- The re-development of social identity
- Informal de-labeling

Judicial Reintegration
- Formal de-labeling
- Re-qualification

Moral Reintegration
- Provision of redress/reparation
- The restoration of good character

Desistance

Based on McNeill and Maruna (2010); McNeill (2012)
A Conceptual Framework Defining Core Domains of Integration

Markers and Means
- Employment
- Housing
- Education
- Health

Social Connection
- Social Bridges
- Social Bonds
- Social Links

Facilitators
- Language and Cultural Knowledge
- Safety and Stability

Foundation
- Rights and Citizenship

From Ager and Strang (2008)
Some problems for this framework

• Varying notions of nationhood and citizenship
  – I want a cosmopolitan republican version

• Looking beyond or behind social capital
  – The nature of reciprocity, trust and social connection

• Seeing integration as a two-way process
  – One that policy can disrupt as well as support

• The dynamics of integration
  – ‘Resource acquisition (or loss) spirals’
Judging criminal sanctions

- Constitutive: Doing justice in good conscience requires a prior just order
- Communicative: What do they say about us, for us and to us?
- Productive: What sorts of social goods do they produce... or destroy?
  - [Not merely the reduction of reoffending]
  - [Not market goods]
